June 11, 2006 at 6:30 pm, Union Church will host the viewing of

"Call Me Malcolm"

produced by United Church of Christ and Filmworks, Inc.

"Call Me Malcolm" is a documentary about a 25-year-old transgender seminary student, and his struggle with faith, love and gender identity.

Rev. Michael D. Schuenemeyer, the UCC's minister for LGBT concerns says that "Call Me Malcolm" is unique among documentaries that deal with transgender issues "because [it] focuses on gender identity as it relates to matters of faith, spirituality, vocation and human personhood... Malcolm does not propose easy answers to the questions that arise, but with enormous heart, integrity and sensitivity shares his own struggles and listens compassionately to [others], as he comes to terms with who he is and God's claim on his life."

Director Joseph Parlagreco says the film is more than an examination of Malcolm's life or the struggles of the transgender community, but a film that all can relate to, because it's about discerning, discovering and celebrating one's identity.
